Our entertainment in Colonial Pennsylvania is very, very different from a typical American child's. Children learn games that will last until your time in America, like Leap Frog, Marbles, and Hop Scotch. We also play Marco Polo, we do puzzles, and make dolls from corn husks to practice our sewing and making things like our mothers do.

A theoretical approach to analyzing the literature produced in countries that were once colonies, especially of European powers such as Britain, France, and Spain. Postcolonial theory also looks at the broader interactions between European nations and the societies they colonized by dealing with issues such as identity (including gender, race, and class), language, representation, and history.
